Superintendent's Report

Spring is just around the corner and the beginning of the golf season is in sight now. Soon our efforts will be turned to cleaning greens off and getting tarps down to encourage the grass out of dormancy.

The reason for doing this is to give the grass a head start on the golf season and have it as ready as possible for the opening of the golf course.

I will be attending the Western Canada Turfgrass Conference in Victoria at the end of February. I will get a chance to talk with other superintendents in the industry as well as experts in turfgrass management.

The ideas and suggestions that I pick up at this conference can be put to good use on our golf course.

Stephen Kerbrat
Course Superintendent

From the Ice Maker

Over the past few years, John and I have gone to a number of training seminars covering such topics as ice making, plant refrigeration, recreational facility operation and care and reconditioning of curling stones. Both John and I are always looking for courses that will give us new ideas and insight on how to improve not only the ice itself but the building, maintenance, equipment and overall operation.

This coming year, we will be attending a one day rock seminar put on by Hi-Pro Sporting Goods and Thompson Curling. We also hope to attend a Curl Canada Ice Technician course some time this coming summer.

We always find the courses interesting and usually come home with something new to try.

Prime-Time versus Non Prime-Time

Questions have arisen on the above rates and why the booking times for Non Prime-Time rates are restricted.

The concept was implemented some time ago at the request of a group of golfers who did not wish to golf on weekends or special days and felt the club could sell this time at a premium and thereby offer a reduced rate outside of these times.

This rationale is still considered valid for the 1996 golf season and hence the rate still offered.

A problem with the power supply has been tentatively resolved, however, the opening of the kitchen will be delayed as the electrical transformer will not be delivered until mid April. All other work can be completed in preparation for the hook up and the move will be started as soon as power is available.

Some of the coolers will be hooked up to power and be in use very shortly. The kitchen features some of the most efficient equipment in Prince George which will help reduce overall operating costs.

Golfers must police the knockoff scourge

It's an amusing story, but officials at Cobra Golf don't laugh when they tell it. Every year, several King Vipers or King Snakes are sent directly to Cobra for repair, as a few uneducated golfers actually believe these knockoff clubs are first cousins to the venerated King Cobra.

Knockoffs, or unauthorized copies, are, in the words of Taylor Made Golf president and CEO Chuck Yash, "a scourge on American industry." Yash is outspoken on the subject of knockoff manufacturers. "It's catch me if you can," he says. "It's anything goes. You have to prove in court that somebody is guilty. Then you have to go and chase and police all the other offenders, no matter where they are."

And where they are – the manufacturers of these bastard clubs – is usually Taiwan, mainland China or Indonesia. The clubs are then brought into the United States by equally unprincipled importers.

In 1992, the Ping Zing iron was introduced by Karsten Manufacturing Corp. at the PGA Merchandise Show. Although no complete sets were available for inspection, the club was a phenomenal success, with some 5,000 orders being written. Within a week of the first shipment, a set of Ping Zing heads had been pulled from the shafts and sent to Taiwan. A few months later, Ping Zing knockoffs were flooding the market.

The U.S. golf industry, led by companies like Cobra, Taylor Made, Karsten, Tommy Armour Golf and Callaway Golf, annually spends tens of millions of dollars to fight the copycats, but the number of outlaws keeps increasing. Taylor Made currently is pursuing 65 separate legal actions against knockoff artists. Callaway, using an army of attorneys, has instigated dozens of successful raids on bootlegging foundries in other countries. Yet, like a never-ending supply of rats, new copies keep replacing the knockoffs that are eliminated.

A distinction should be drawn between knockoffs and counterfeits. A knockoff is a club that copies the shape of an established brand, but does not directly copy its name. Big Bursar, for example, is a thinly disguised knockoff of the Callaway Big Bertha. Counterfeits, on the other hand, are clubs that illegally carry both the shape and name. While counterfeit golf clubs can be found in some parts of the world, they generally are not a problem in the United States.

Knockoffs, though, are a huge problem. Here are a few reasons why:

- Reason No. 1: No matter what we may have heard, knockoffs are not manufactured with the same quality that goes into the originals. For starters, the metal is almost always inferior. It may say stainless steel on that knockoff, but don't believe it. Knockoffs routinely are made with scrap metal, not virgin metal. They contain slag and other impurities, not to mention gaps in the metallurgical structure.

- Reason No. 2: Inferior manufacturing leads to inferior playability. The feel of today's investment cast stainless steel iron heads from reputable companies is virtually indistinguishable from that of forged steel heads. Tests have shown that even touring pros can't tell the difference. Knockoffs, however, are substandard in both feel and performance.

- Reason No. 3: Today's top golf clubs are scientifically matched, with shafts and heads forming a carefully conceived, cohesive unit. Knockoffs usually contain shafts that are chosen for one simple reason – price.

- Reason No. 4: Chasing these illicit manufacturers costs money, which adds to the overhead. The clubs we buy are more expensive because people with a get-rich-quick mentality are out there copying the ideas of established companies.

Will it ever stop? No, says Bert Haynes, the veteran attorney and patent agent for Karsten Manufacturing. "We'll never stop it." Hayes says, "We hope to slow it down, primarily by changing the mindset of golfers."

So here's my solution. We, as men and women who love golf, should refuse to play with any golfers who uses knockoffs. We should police ourselves.

This is more than a vigilante movement. It is an effort to do the right thing. If some of our fellow golfers require education about knockoffs, fine. If they use clubs that were produced illegally, they should be informed of the fact.

Consider the underlying message sent by golfers who play knockoffs. Can we trust players who carry these clubs? Golf's time-proven code of conduct depends on our personal honor and discipline. Can we trust knockoff golfers whose clubs were produced by skirting patent or trademark laws? I don't know.

The only way to eliminate our uncertainty? Say "No thanks. As a matter of principle, I can't play with you."

Let's knock out the knockoffs.

27th Annual Mixed Bonspiel

Forty-one teams curled in the Mixed Bonspiel held February 2-4. Curling started Friday night with the finals being played on Sunday evening. The sit-down banquet was fabulous on Saturday night. Thank you to the Chef and all the staff. Dinner was followed by dancing to Lightning Sound.

A special thank you to the sponsors for donating prizes for the Elimination Draw: BC GAS, CHINA BOB'S, COLLEGE HEIGHTS PUB, HUSKY OIL, PG FLOOR FASHIONS, STYLES UNLIMITED, UNITED CAREPT, WESTEL.

The winner of the BC Gas portable barbeque was Tracy McFarlane. There were two 50/50 draws held. Winners were Joanne Nowranski and Marie Alexander.

There were 4 teams with players from out of town. This helps to add to the success of the Bonspiel. Thanks for coming and we hope to see more out of town players next year.

WE HOPE TO SEE YOU ALL BACK NEXT YEAR.

What you told us

Following are graphic results of the Club survey sent out in January. Approximately 950 questionnaires were mailed out and 270 were returned. This is a very adequate number to reflect the opinion of our club members.

There are varying numbers of responses as noted on each question reflecting the diversity of usage of the club's facilities by members. Extensive written comments and suggestions were also received which will be used to interpret the number results of each question.

The information you have provided will be used by management to continually improve the service at the club and by the Board of Directors to plan the type and timing of changes and renovations to the club's facilities and to set a direction for the service offerings of the club. Department heads are currently preparing action plans for their respective areas for 1996 and the Board will be holding a planning seminar to update the long term plans.

To those who participated in the survey, we express our appreciation. Your input is the only way that we can be assured we are providing what the majority of members want at our club.
